To keep the Home page of your Nupedia profile up to date, simply log in on the public page on the Nupedia homepage (then look in the upper right corner. There you will see a drop down menu. Select "Edit Profile". The "Edit Profile" page is a fairly advanced page. It allows you to add, edit and delete whatever you like, and change various settings, e.g., your profile picture, email address, name, and so on. If you have any questions, there is a good FAQ located at As of July 1, 2016, content pages on Nupedia can be verified as being present in the Real Names project. While the project is in progress, it will also record any content pages that are edited within the past week. There are many ways to get an RSS feed for an article. You can add the address to your feeds reader, or look for it on the right-hand side of the page. Since Nupedia has different feeds for the various subjects, it is a bit different. If you want the RSS for all categories, then you need to check each and every feed and add the URL in your reader. The simplest way is to use Nupedia's RSS exporter. These are the items to check: The default setting is that all of the feeds are listed. If you need help, there is a help section at Nupedia isn't accepting edits, but there is a project to archive all of the articles at There is a program (free) that you can use to do text-to-speech. It allows you to use it to read the articles to you, and make notes on what you read. The program is called

Field of the Invention This invention relates to data processing systems, and more particularly to the provision of peripheral units which incorporate both a memory and a processor. 2. Description of the Prior Art It is known to provide a central processing unit which is embodied in a single chip, such as is shown in the article entitled, "A VLSI CMOS/BiCMOS DSP Chip" by P. R. Gray et al., published in the IEEE Journal of Solid State Circuits, Vol. SC-21, No. 6, December 1986, pages 945-951. The single chip may comprise a memory, a processor, and an arithmetic unit. This article sets forth a number of possible uses for the single chip. One such use is for a modular processor in which the memory and the arithmetic unit are embodied in separate modules, each with its own power supply. The article entitled, "Application Specific Design of CMOS Digital Signal Processor Chip" by C. B. Patel et al., published in the IEEE Journal of Solid State Circuits, Vol. SC-21, No. 6, December 1986, pages 952-959 describes an application-specific integrated circuit (ASIC) processor which is embodied
