But here it is: 1. I'm in constant contact with the client, both in writing (email) and in person. 2. Generally I develop a concept document with them, documenting the problem, a proposed solution and general design notes. They approve of, and discuss the concept with me, I make some changes to make sure they're happy, then develop a mockup. 3. I provide a concept document of the mockup. 4. I then develop the wireframe and design. 5. I deliver the wireframe and design. 6. I then provide a mockup of the wireframe with the design (and they approve). 7. I build the pages and deliver them for them to review. 8. They approve, provide feedback and so on. 9. After I develop the html and the jquery, I package the pages. 10. I then deliver the pages (i.e. compile the page and deliver it via ftp). 11. I then deliver a swf file for if they need some sort of flash intro / outro. 12. They then do final proofing and I deliver their finished product to them. 13
